

Worksystems and seven community-based organizations are teaming up to connect people from the Portland Metro area to clean energy-related careers through career coaching and training resources.

WHAT ARE CLEAN ENERGY-RELATED JOBS?

There are many jobs related to the clean energy transition.

Here are some examples:

Jobs related to building homes and businesses that are more efficient and powered by electricity. Think electricians, carpenters, plumbers, home energy assessors, on-site solar installers, HVAC contractors, and more.

Jobs with companies that create and bring electricity to our homes and businesses. Think people who repair and maintain power lines; and workers who install and maintain large-scale solar, wind, and hydroelectric power generation.

Jobs in transportation and public transit that move people and goods from Point A to Point B. Think people who maintain and operate light rail trains and buses or the infrastructure that supports them.

Jobs at companies that manufacture, assemble, or recycle battery systems, or produce electric vehicles, switches, controls, and other components that support clean energy.

Jobs in natural resource management, regenerative agriculture, or forestry that sustainably produce food or maintain open space and forest lands. Think urban foresters who nurture and maintain vegetation in public spaces to provide shade, prevent heat islands, and help control stormwater runoff.

Urban League of Portland

The Urban League of Portland's (ULP) mission is to empower African-Americans and others to achieve equality in education, employment, health, economic security, and quality of life. The Portland chapter, activated in 1945, is one of the oldest civil rights and service organizations in the area. As longtime champions for fair housing and inclusive employment, ULP helps identify and correct discriminatory practices and policies commonly used to oppress Black people.
